Contested heritage and working with contested heritage represents, therefore, an opportunity to broaden out the way heritage is made, and to make the heritage space an area in which many different stories can be told. And a story that doesn't necessarily have to lead to mutual antagonism. That can lead to a more socially inclusive future.

Jasper Chalcraft, from the University of Sussex, explains why cultural heritage can be contested: When different views of heritage are opposed and conflictual. When the very notion of cultural heritage is contested. He emphasizes the contrast between two approaches to cultural heritage: 'guardianship', defended by the Maori people in New Zealand, as opposed to 'ownership', which is dominant in Europe.

The key themes of the series are the heritage and memory of war and conflict, contested heritage, and competing memories. The series editors seek books that analyze the dynamics of the past from the perspective of tangible and intangible remnants, spaces, and traces as well as heritage appropriations and restitutions, significations, musealizations, and mediatizations in the present.

Palgrave Studies in Cultural Heritage and Conflict | Ihab ...

This chapter examines the social and cultural work that theatrical performance and storytelling can do to negotiate contested cultural heritages and memory in two specific geographical contexts. The geographical contexts are Northern Ireland, where deep-rooted divisions between Catholics and Protestants remain a fact of life, and the border region between Bavaria and Bohemia, where the historical conflict between Germans and Czechs continues to have an impact on their relationship to this day.
